Untitled – How our social system can manipulate and control our way of thinking through information and other means – 2016

Daniela: Portrait of my mother – I started photographing my mother to learn how to use a camera; i continued doing so in order to spend some time with her. I'm still photographing her to witness and tell our story. Photography is a sort of bridge in our relationship, it helps me to know her. I don't think that photography can fill the communication gap between us but is one of the very few moments where we connect and discuss things. In this work i represent her life's situations and events, the ones that directly impact me, and my own family experiences. Sometimes the situations i stage become real: a memory, an experience that i witness in the very moment i shoot them.

"Of course, some painful cracks developed in my soul, and i lived away from reality for who knows how long". This is one of the sentences my mother wrote in her diary; an important reference point for this work – 2009/2020
